The Auto Archaeologist

by Ryan Brutt

I have been traveling around the country, documenting cool cars in barns, fields, junkyards and just about anywhere else you can imagine. The one thing that keeps me up at night is not the cars, it's the people. We are running out of time. Lately I have been involved with more families who are getting collections from their father or grandfather after they pass, and they have no idea what to do with it. They contact me, or any number of other authorities on the cars to try and help them sort out the mess. Unfortunately it's always a mess. They say we do not think this is going to end, we think that our children were invested enough in these cars that they will do something with them.

Truth is they do not. Nowadays more than likely those cars that you cherished and loved will be sold off at auction. You see it all the time with several different companies. They come in, organize, collect, and then disperse the collection to those that will enjoy it.

That is the best outcome. Unfortunately, I have been either around or directly involved in a few collections that have been an utter mess. A few of the people do not have wills. If I can leave you with one advise, HAVE A WILL! Have a list, have some sort of organization. These family members had to not only deal with the loss of their father. Now without a will, everything must go through the court system. So not only do they not know what they have, but now they must show the courts and get it all cataloged and straightened out before anything can even be moved.

There was a case where the best friends to the father started stealing parts and even complete cars after his death. But the father did not leave a will, and everything had to go through probate, and with the cars gone it was a complete mess. The family just decided not to fight and let the thieves keep the cars. They lost out on tens of thousands of dollars from their father because his best friends took advantage of the situation.

It makes me sick, sick that this happens. It does not have to, if you are prepared. I am not saying go out right now and create a will. But were not around here forever, and if you want your cars to be well take care of, plan for that. Put down in writing where things are, what they are, their importance and maybe a price. Make sure that your family will know what the next steps could be when the time comes.

I wish those I have had to deal with lately had that sort of foresight. I know that their families would have appreciated it as well. Kinda leaves their legacy on a sour note. So please, be prepared. Tomorrow is not guaranteed, so be prepared as the Boy Scouts say. It's worth it in the long run.
